

Boudreaux and Thibodeaux decided to go see the LSU Tigers play the Texas Longhorns in the Cotton Bowl. After buying game tickets and fancy LSU hats they were a little short of money, so they hitchhiked to Houston to catch the train to Dallas.

In the Houston train station the boys got a hard time about their hats from a couple of Texas fans. The Texans each bought a ticket to Dallas, Boudreaux bought one but Thibodeaux didn't.

"Boudreaux, how you stupid Cajuns both going to get to Dallas with only one ticket?", one of the Texans asked.

"Dare's a way", Boudreaux replied.

On the train the Texans took seats and watched Boudreaux and Thibodeaux both go into the same toilet. As the conductor passed through collecting tickets he knocked on the toilet door and said, "Ticket Please". The door opened a little, a ticket came out, and the door closed quickly. "That's pretty slick", one Texans said to the other.

The Longhorns beat the Tigers 38 to 14 and in the Dallas train station on the way back the same two Texans were rubbing it in. Only one of the Texans bought a ticket this time, Boudreaux got in the ticket line but changed his mind.

"Boudreaux, how you stupid Cajuns both going to get to Houston with no ticket?", one of the Texans asked.

"Dare's a way", Boudreaux replied.

On the train both Texans rushed into the first toilet, Boudreaux and Thibodeaux had to take the second. As the train started to move Boudreaux sneaked out and knocked on the door of the Texans toilet. In a deep voice he said, "Ticket Please".
