

In an attempt to make the biology lesson more interesting the teacher was contrasting lives of Red Fire Ants with Black Carpenter Ants. The class was listening intently, except for Boudreaux - he was sleeping. Toward the end of the lesson Boudreaux's snoring got to be too much for the teacher to ignore.

"Wake up Boudreaux," she yelled.

Boudreaux jumped and said, "I'm awake, I wasn't sleeping."

"You weren't sleeping? You were just listening with you head down on the desk. Right?" the teacher asked.

"Yeah, dat's right," Boudreaux replied.

"So you heard what we were talking about. Why don't you stand up and tell the class about the two kinds of ants?" the teacher said.

Boudreaux stood up slowly, but he was thinking real fast. He began, "Dere's two kinds of ants. One kind is bugs - and the other kind is Lady Uncles."
