

These days things are tough down on the bayou. With the hurricanes forcing people to move away to make a living, it's getting hard to find good people. The situation is so desperate that Boudreaux got elected judge.

One evening last month he was holding traffic court. A familiar looking young man charged with speeding was brought before him. The man pleaded guilty:

"Do I know you? Ya look familiar. Ain't I seen you before? Judge Boudreaux asked before announcing a fine.

"Yes Judge," the young man said and began to smile, "Last year I gave your son violin lessons."

"Oh yeah, I 'member now," Judge Boudreaux said, "Let's see you were doing 43 in a 35mph zone - twenty years!"
