

Boudreaux's niece Teresa was 18, slim, friendly, beautiful, going to LSU, and having the time of her life. And - as sometimes happens to slim, friendly, beautiful 18 year old girls going to LSU - she got pregnant.

To his credit, upon hearing the news George, the responsible young man, quickly asked, "Teresa, will you marry me?"

"Dis is all way too fas," Teresa said, "Aunt Charmaine told me to come talk wid her before I do anything else. I gonna see her tonite. I'll let ya know tomorrow."

The next day Teresa walked up to George and announced, "George, I can't marry you."

"Why not?" George asked, "I love you. You're having my baby. My family is one of the richest in Texas. Why can't you marry me?"

"Me and da family talked dis over last nite," Teresa explained, "It took most of da nite. We decided dat we'd rather have a bastard in da family dan a Texan. Sorry."
